(4) If this is possible and appropriate, the holder of information shall grant access to open data in a file format which is structured so that software applications can easily identify, recognize and extract specific data, including individual statements of fact, and their internal structure (hereinafter machine-readable format), and in a format that is platform-independent and made available to the public without any restriction that impedes the re-use of documents (hereinafter open format) together with data descriptions describing data sets and data contained therein. If conversion of open data into digital format, machine-readable format or open format is impossible or would involve disproportionately great effort, the holder of information shall grant access to open data in their original format or in any other format.

(7) If information disclosed pursuant to law contains personal data, the public use of such information may be restricted if giving such information for public use would significantly breach the inviolability of the private life of the person.

[RT I, 06.01.2016, 1 – entry into force 16.01.2016]

(8) If giving information, which is disclosed pursuant to law and contains personal data, for public use breaches the inviolability of the private life of the person, such information shall be given for public use in a way which does not significantly breach the inviolability of the private life of the person.

Where making dynamic data available for re-use immediately after collection would exceed the financial and technical capacities of the holder of information in a disproportionate manner, those dynamic data shall be made available within the shortest possible time frame and with technical restrictions that do not unduly impair the exploitation of their economic and social potential.

[RT I, 30.11.2021, 3 – entry into force 10.12.2021]

(9) The re-use of open data shall generally not be subject to conditions.
